Army musicians represent all of the heroic men and women who stand around the world in defense of our freedom. Through their musical education, continual training, and masterful performances, these outstanding Soldier-Musicians truly embody the excellence that is found across America's Army. The staff & faculty assigned to the U.S. Army School of Music are selected from the most qualified musicians in the Army, most of whom hold advanced degrees.

Army bands regularly support all manner of ceremonies, senior commanders' community engagement initiatives, strategic and cultural diplomacy efforts, veterans' organizations, Army recruiting, educational outreach, military funerals, public performances, and other missions of national and international significance. Army bands also promote national interests, further U.S. interests at home and abroad, support peace building actions, influence regional perceptions, build partner capacity, develop cultural awareness, enhance international legitimacy, unite diverse cultures, as well as establish, shape, maintain, and refine relations. It is the purpose of the U.S. Army School of Music to prepare Soldier-Musicians to thrive in achieving these complex tasks.
